We did coin the term MMORPG, but it's hard to be the arbiter of what "counts" as an MMO or MMORPG. I think MMO would be any persistent really where a community of many thousands or more can simultaneously explore and interact with each other.

@RichardGarriott Quick question since you are credited with coining the term MMORPG. In your eyes is destiny 2 a MMO? Some people say no as it lacks Huge open maps but yet it is a massively multiplayer game with a persistent world under a single "server" even if it's hub based.

I've always thought of the "massively" in MMO to relate to how far the effect of your actions reaches. In UO I crafted furniture that ended up in homes I never visited, and was enjoyed by avatars I never met. In #LBSOTA I wear armor crafted by people I don't know (yet).

I enjoy bypassing filters and creating as many items as I can before I get caught. In the past I probably had too much time on my hands.

MMOFPS sounds like a good term for Destiny imo

Listen to what RG says. He can drop a meteor on your cosy cabin in SOTA. He's done it before! lol
